

About

I am an Assistant lecturer at the Faculty of Journalism and Communication Sciences, University of Bucharest, and a PhD student at the Faculty of Sociology, as you can see in my CV: I have diplomas both in Journalism and in Political Sciences.

I have simultaneously studied journalism, public relations and political sciences. Is that truly useful for me, one might ask, as long as I am not doing either politics or business?

I graduated two faculties and two masters of art out of pleasure and professional interest. The combined specializations of communication and political sciences recommend me as a professional in political communication. I am teaching out of passion, but I am a radio presenter because I find it amusing.

At the Department of Cultural Anthropology and Communication I am teaching a course of Political Marketing. This is the reason why I was selected in 2004 for a scholarship at an in-depth course of electoral campaigns, held in Amsterdam.

As an assistant lecturer, I am leading the seminars for the course of Introduction in Political Sciences (held by PhD University Professor Cristian Pîrvulescu) and for the course of Social Structures of Communication (held by PhD University Professor Zoltan Rostas).

I have worked for several radio stations in the past 10 years and I teach Introduction in Radio Techniques, as well as Genders of Radio Journalism at the Department of Press from the Faculty of Journalism and Communication Sciences, University of Bucharest.

I have collaborated with important press corporations, for which I presented radio and TV broadcasts: Realitatea TV, Centrul Național Media – National FM, Societatea Româna de Radio.

I am currently working at InfoPro radio station, belonging to Media Pro trust, where I am presenting the morning show each weekend.

Lately I have been writing articles in the cultural magazine Dilema veche. I organize and present the SERILE FJSC event at the Faculty of Journalism and Communication Sciences (in short FJSC, hence the name of the event). My goal with this event is that, together with the journalism and communication students, we will develop a market of ideas out of which mass-media, lobby groups, opinion leaders and even politicians will be able to undertake controversial subjects and include them on their agenda.

I wrote a book of social history that has recently been published. Its title is Petty Activists (interviews of life story with communist nostalgics, propagandists, securists). I also write paper works for a PhD with the theme A political history of the Sociologic School of Bucharest established by Dimitrie Gusti.

I wish to create a space for debating ideas on this site and not just for quarrelling with words. But that depends on you. Feel free to comment and express yourselves on the blog, where there are no other limits except for the censorship of intelligence: it's just your Internet and my blog!
